

ABSTRACT

In one embodiment, a portable data acquisition unit includes a pressure sensor that is configured to measure pressure signals at a high-frequency rate, the signals pertaining to patient breathing, a microcontroller that receives pressure signals measured by the 5 pressure sensor and determines clocks times associated with the pressure signals, and an interface that is configured to output sleep session data from the data acquisition unit to another device.